

Latino Caucus "Mission Statement"

The Latino Caucus, an entity in official relations with the American Public Health Association, was formed over 30 years ago to represent and advocate for the health interest of the Latino community, both within and outside the APHA structure. The Caucus facilitates active participation of Latino public health workers in the organizational and programmatic activities of the APHA and provides a means for professional growth for members to meet today's challenges with solutions for today and the future.

The Goals of the Latino Caucus are

- to identify emerging and existing Latino health professionals;
- to serve as a vehicle for the promotion of Latino public health through a scientific program
- to educate and inform about major Latino community issues and to enhance the development of our professionals' and communities' skills and abilities;
- to inspire and provide opportunities for emerging Latino public health professionals; and
- to provide a means for establishing and maintaining relationships among Latino health professionals and those interested in Latino health.
